Effective 1 January 1952, a set of strict regulations to economize on fuel was instituted in the Soviet main ration supply depot at Frankfurt/Oder. Depot-owned trucks could be operated only upon clearance by the commandant himself. The depot-owned Diesel locomotive discontinued operations, and incoming railroad cars were shunted manually by the work force. Units which regularly picked up ration supplies at the depot started using horse-drawn vehicles instead of trucks. * The following incoming and outgoing shipments were observed between 24 December 1951 and 2 February 1952:
